	same everywhere. Not all societies have the malagasy way of thinking parents with many children. But some kind of family has different rules. And when a person marries besides the new wife or husband, he or she also gets complete new families and many children. Having many children do not always produce happily families, so all societies have rules about the number of the children they want. Each society also has a division of work based on age and sex. In modern rules, there is a move to change, the last rule because it can be unfair to children, and it won't be interesting to follow the traditional malagasy saying.
